

NIKI BEZZANT

Location: Auckland

Niki Bezzant is one of New Zealand's most trusted voices in health journalism, women's health, wellbeing and menopause, with more than 20 years' experience across the NZ media landscape. Known for making complex health and science topics easy to understand (and actually interesting), Niki brings the rare combo of credibility, warmth and real-world practicality, the kind that lands with a mixed audience.

In 2022, Penguin Random House published Niki's bestselling book, This Changes Everything: the honest guide to perimenopause and menopause, which helped bring menopause out of the shadows and into everyday conversation. In 2024 she followed with The Everything Guide, a modern take on ageing and midlife that tackles body image, mental health, feeling stuck, and how to reconnect with ourselves in a way that's realistic and refreshing. In 2025, Niki toured New Zealand with Petra Bagust on their Hot Mess Tour, selling out shows around the country.

Niki has also shaped the national conversation through her work in publishing. She was the founding editor of Healthy Food Guide magazine, which became New Zealand's best-selling food publication and held that position for over a decade. Her writing features in New Zealand Listener, and she regularly appears on RNZ's The Panel.

As a speaker, Niki is in demand for corporate organisations, conferences and leadership events looking for evidence-based wellbeing content that's relevant right now. She speaks on midlife wellbeing, hormones, sleep, stress, brain and heart health, and menopause — delivering practical, science-backed advice in a fun, conversational, open style. She's also a safe pair of hands for workplaces: credible, inclusive, and able to handle questions without judgement or awkwardness.
